BCI international convention at Mulhouse

The Bonsai Clubs International (BCI) convention, which will take place in Mulhouse from 12 to 14 October this year, has not yet completed its programme. In addition to the exhibitions, which we will be discussing in our upcoming issues, about 20 demonstrators have been announced. Latest scoop: there will also be an exhibition of trees by John Naka, who was a pioneer of occidental bonsai in Europe in the 1990s. A reminder that the 2018 FFB convention will be held at the same time in Mulhouse.

A prize awarded at Noelanders

In our article on Noelanders 2018, in Esprit Bonsai International 93 issue, we omitted to include the prizes received by Enzo Ferrari from Switzerland for his suiseki. Enzo's stone won two prizes, one from the Bonsai Clubs International, awarded by Gudrun Benz, and a special mention awarded by the Japanese master Kunio Koboyashi.

A new concept for training pots

The Tie Pot is a patented training pot optimised for growing and shaping bonsai. It has knobs along the rim for a quick and sturdy attachment of guy wires. And it has an air root pruning system for growing healthy and efficient roots that accelerate the growth and development of a bonsai.

The size of the first model is 28 x 11 cm (outer dimensions without the knobs). More sizes are in preparation. It will be available in specialist shops and also can be ordered ex works on our website for €12,80 per item. Two innovations, knobs and air pruning. Knobs: the knobs serve as solid, resilient fixings that make the use of guy wires easier, quicker and more precise. The pots are made of solid, long-lasting, UV stabilised polypropylene and have stiffening ribs so they don't bend under mechanical stress. Air pruning: air pruning (also called air root pruning) avoids the growth of unhealthy, deformed circling roots. Instead, the tree develops a dense, efficient, well-branched and fibrous root ball with plenty of feeder roots and root hairs. In a Tie Pot the air pruning method is especially adapted for bonsai requirements. All the necessary structures are hidden inside the pot, so the outer appearance is not disturbed. Every root tip that reaches the walls or the bottom of the pot is lead into an aeration hole within a few centimetres. As the drainage holes are spread over the entire bottom of the pot, the whole root ball is evenly aerated and there is no waterlogging. A few weeks after planting a tree into a Tie Pot, the first effects of the air pruning can be observed: root tips start growing out of the drainage holes and indicate that circling roots are avoided.

The Tie Pot: with its knobs and aeration holes this is a pot that will revolutionise bonsai cultivation.

Drainage holes stimulate the development and ramification of the roots.

NEWS

Laurent Breyse has left us

Laurent Breyse was a well-known figure among the French bonsai artists and to the readers of Esprit Bonsai when it made its first appearance. A great lover of pines, insects and nature in general, he owned the Arbre aux Papillons (The Butterfly Tree) nursery in Polignac, in the Haute-Loire.

On 20 April 2018 Laurent Breyse passed away suddenly.

His trees were the benchmark of his character and were often departures away from Japanese conventions. He died suddenly on April 20, when he was scheduled to lead a workshop in Ille-et-Vilaine before going to the Jardin du Levant at Saint-Germain-du-Pinel where he was to give demonstrations during the weekend. Our heartfelt thoughts go out to his family and to those close to him. We pay tribute to him in the pages of this issue.
